CURRENT AFFAIRS ENRICHMENT.....READ ALL ABOUT IT!

In this issue, Remembrance and thinking of others are connections between this week's stories. Many war heroes have been remembered in Remembrance Day this week. Meanwhile, Children in Need encourages us to remember the needy and disadvantaged. We also think about people who have been jailed needlessly and hope that we inspire our readers to spread the word and do something about it. I hope you enjoy our amazing, fantastic, incredible newspaper.

The poppy appeal

Jack Ramsbottom SHAR

The Poppy Appeal was started so we could remember the great men who gave their lives so we could live ours the way we do. I personally think this is great because it helps us to remember and think about those who gave their lives. All profits are given to veterans and men and women who are in need of it.

This was started in 1921, inspired by a poem. I like it because I had a great granddad who died at thirty in World War One. I think the minute's silence is a good idea and we all have to do it. I have done it three times in different places.

The poppy that people wear has made £40 million for the charity in the UK. It was made so people have something to show they have supported the charity. I think it is bad that some people will use the same poppy because they are cheating because they haven't supported the charity this year.

There has been a single released this year in aid of the Poppy Appeal. It's a cover of No Man's Land written by a Scottish man in 1975 and reflects on a young man who died in the war. I think this is good because it will help raise money and awareness when it's played.

There is a new thing called a Poppy Selfie. This is where you get as many people as you can and take a selfie whilst wearing a poppy and share it on any social network you can. This is good for wearing awareness as you are meant to write why you're doing it so people know about it.

It takes 350 000 people each year who give up their time for the Poppy Appeal. They will be selling poppies, making them, or organising places to put them and things like that. These people will give up to two hours of their time per day.

The Poppy Appeal is the Royal British Legion's biggest project and raises them more in a month than they will in the rest of the year.

Tower poppies going on tour

Jasmine Denton ShAR

David Cameron intervenes at the poppies in the Tower of London, making the key sections stay for an extra-three weeks!

The two sections of the memorial will now remain at the Tower for an extra two and half weeks until the end of the November. The 'weeping widow' which is made up of thousands of ceramic poppies cascading out of the towers window and the 'Wave' which rises over the causeway used by the public to enter the castle, will then go on tour and then settle at the Imperial War Museum.

The Prime Minister states "a very short space of time becomes a much loved and respected monument." He also said "We want to ensure that as many people as possible have the opportunity to witness it, and the government is providing money and working with charities to do so. By displaying parts of the installation around the country and then permanently in the Imperial War Museum, we have ensured that this poignant memorial will be saved for the nation."

The tour will last until the end of the centenary commemorations in 2018 and will be funded from two major donations from, the Backstage Trust and the Clore Duffield Foundation. £500,000 of funding from the Government raised from Libor fines on the banks will go towards the installing, storage and transport costs.

The Tower has also agreed to floodlight the West Moat for extra hours each day so visitors can see the memorial from 4:30pm to 12am.

The memorial, which has 888,246 poppies is now slowly starting to be dismantled. It started to be taken down on 12 November.

Ebay has banned people selling the flowers on the auction site because the company believes in the "significance of each individual poppy as a memorial to an individual British military fatality."

Jailed needlessly

Saffron Nathan ShCM

The head of a review into prison suicides has said that too many people are being jailed unnecessarily. Lord Harris said that resources were being weakened and leaving vulnerable inmates unsupervised. This has been said after the parents of a man who killed himself at a young offender's institution criticised authorities.

In February the government asked Labour peer Lord Harris to do a review on how to reduce suicides in custody. His findings are expected to be presented next summer. He thinks that prison authorities are preventing others from receiving the support they need by unnecessarily imprisoning some people.

Lord Harris said: "The critical issue is why some prisoners are [in jail] in the first place.

"Are there interventions that could have been done, could have saved the government money by stopping them ending up in the criminal justice system in the first place, or not necessarily ending up in prison?

"Obviously there will always be a core of prisoners who do need to be in prison. But, if some of the others were not there, there would be more resources to make sure those individuals were supported and prison achieved its objectives in terms of rehabilitation."

He says this after 21 year old Steven Davidson's parents asked why authorities didn't do more to protect him. Davidson killed himself while at Glen Parva Young Offenders' Institution in 2013.

Davidson was jailed after being found in possession of a knife, with which he had threatened to harm himself. He was told that when a bed became available he would be moved to a mental hospital but he killed himself in his cell in September 2013; he had been in the prison for three months.

A staff member had failed to monitor him properly and was inadequately trained to help vulnerable people. His mother Lynda explained: "It was like 'he's just another lad who's been sent to prison'." She added: "Instead of looking at why he's been sent to prison and what he needed, it was like [the authorities said] 'There you go Steven - there's your cell - get on with it'."

Davidson had not been moved to a safe cell, due to the fact that he was graded at "low risk" of self harm and suicide at prison.

Davidson's father said that the people who had assessed Davidson "weren't trained in mental health".

Overall all in England and Wales the prison suicide rates have risen by 52% since 2011-12.

They show that 87 inmates committed suicide in September 2014, but in September 2012, 57 did.

A new kind of system needs to be created for people who need more mental health care so that they are at less risk. This will allow prison officials to concentrate on them instead of having a mix of prisoners who have different needs.

Children in Need

Eve Jawara, ShCI

Children in Need is an annual fundraiser, organised by the BBC. It helps children all over the UK and in other parts of the world too. Their work is widely supported and millions of lives are changed because of them.

On Children in Need Day every year, a television appeal show is held. Different celebrities join together to create a show to entertain, persuade, and emotionally touch the public sitting in their homes.

This year, the show will be presented by Sir Terry Wogan, Tess Daly, Fearne Cotton, Nick Grimshaw, and Saturday's singer, Rochelle Humes. A star performance from the legendary cartoon 'Tom and Jerry' will definitely be one of the highlights of the show. The cast of Eastenders are going to be in Albert Square with a special sketch solely for Children in Need. Appeal videos will be shown throughout the programme, with stories told by different celebrities, in different places, about different charities needing support. Many BBC shows will be participating with exclusive episodes in the show. Finally, a reunion for S Club 7 will take place on the appeal show.

To top it all off, Gareth Malone (organiser of different choirs across the UK, including the Military Wives) is setting up the all-star choir to perform this year's Children in Need song; a remake of the famous Avicii song, Wake Me Up. Malone said "The song is all about overcoming tough times, which is exactly what Children in Need do". The all-star choir includes people such as Jo Brand, Bake-off presenter Mel Giedroyc, and Strictly Come Dancing judge Craig Revel-Horwood. Performances from One Direction, Cheryl Fernandez-Versini, The Script, Susan Boyle, and Boyzone will also take place.

One of the fundraisers for Children in Need was celebrities going BearFaced (having a photo shoot with no makeup on). Singer, Sophie Ellis-Bextor; actress, Olivia Colman; singer, Laura Mvula, and Saturday's star and one of this year's presenters for the appeal show, Rochelle Humes, all ditched the makeup for a paw print, and raised thousands for Children in Need. All in all, Children in Need is a wonderful charity supporting over 2,600 projects across the UK and Africa. Fundraisers are held everywhere to maintain the amazing work that Children in Need does.

Rosetta Landing Issues

Max Wood ShLB

On Wednesday November 12th at 8am, the ESA (European Space Agency) received a transmission which said that their Philae Lander had landed on comet 67P/Churyumov-Gerasimenko or 67P/C-G. This made it one of the first craft to land on a moving object in space. The mission was dubbed 'Rosetta' after the famous stone that helped archaeologists decipher the language of the Egyptians. The comet has a rotation period of 12.4 hours and an orbit of 6.45 years. It was discovered on 20 September 1969 by Klim Ivanovych a Russian astronomer.

The ESA has hoped that the mission will help them and NASA (North American Space Agency). They hope to find out how the Sun affects the orbit of such space rocks and find out what makes a comet tick; what makes it happen. After spending more than 10 years in space, the Lander touched down on the 455 billion kilogram space rock. The Lander took three tries to make it stay on the surface of the celestial object.

The Philae is equipped with these sensor packages:

APXS (Alpha Proton X-ray Spectrometer)

ROLIS (Rosetta Lander Imaging System)

CONSERT (Comet Nucleus Sounding)

COSAC (Cometary Sampling and Composition experiment)

MODULUS PTOLEMY (Evolved Gas Analyser)

MUPUS (Multi-Purpose Sensor for Surface and Subsurface Science)

ROMAP (RoLand Magnetometer and Plasma Monitor)

SD2 (Sample and Distribution Device)

SESAME (Surface Electrical
Sounding and Acoustic
Monitoring Experiment)

We hope that this mission, on the comet dubbed the 'The time capsule of the Solar System' by ESA, will reveal some of the cloudy past of our little chunk of the Universe. I believe that this will be invaluable to discover the future of our Solar System that is shaped by objects like this.

Polish woman back from the dead!

Saffie Mehra, ShPS

A 91 year old Polish woman who was incorrectly declared dead for 11 hours has now been returned to her family.

The Polish woman, Janina Kolkiewicz, was said to be dead after being seen by the family doctor. However, staff who worked at the morgue she was in said they were amazed to see slight movements coming from her body bag and police have made the decision to mount an investigation into the matter as it is not your day to day daily news story.

When Janina Kolkiewicz got home after being kept in cold storage for 11 hours she warmed herself up with a big bowl of soup and two pancakes.

The woman's niece called the doctor after coming home one day from work to find her aunt not breathing and without a pulse. After the family doctor had finished the examination he declared the woman dead and wrote out her death certificate.

The body was taken away and plans were made for a funeral two days later.

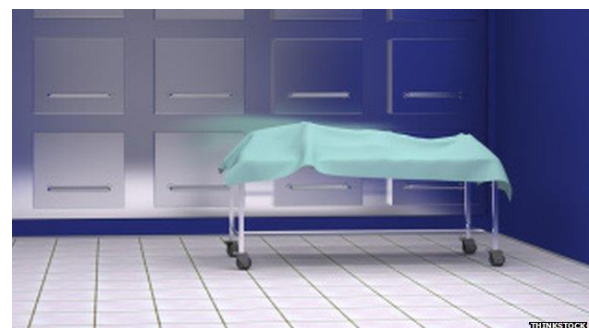

When interviewed the family doctor who had said the woman was dead told reporters, "I was sure she was dead". When Dr Czyz was interviewed she said "I'm stunned, I don't understand what happened, her heart just stopped beating, she was no longer breathing."

When the morgue staff went to check the body many hours later they were surprised to find her alive so the death certificate was declared invalid.

She is now apparently oblivious to how close she came to the grave, complaining only about feeling cold as she was kept in cold storage.

Her niece told the local media that "My aunt has no inkling of what happened since she has late-stage dementia."

I personally think that this situation is an amazing event that doesn't occur every day, but I also think it was very irresponsible of all the doctors and morgue staff not to have realized that she was still living. If she had been left in cold storage for too long she would have needlessly died for this mistake.

David Moyes accepts Real Sociedad

Alistair Smellie 3RL

David Moyes has accepted an offer to manage Real Sociedad in Spain. Moyes was dismissed as Manchester United manager in April and was replaced by Louis Van Gaal, who led the Netherlands to come 3rd in the World Cup.

"Real Sociedad tugged at my heart strings," Moyes said. "La Liga has the finest players and great coaches and I want to test myself against the best." He added: "It is the right time. I am well rested and I am ready to go."

Moyes has signed a contract that will continue until June 2016 and replaces Jagoba Arrasate, who was dismissed after a poor run of form which has left the club 15th in La Liga. However, there are reasons for Moyes to be optimistic.

Sociedad have already beaten Real Madrid this season and recorded their second win of the campaign on Sunday when they overcame champions Atletico Madrid.

"I see great morale amongst the players," Moyes said. "Last Sunday's result against Atletico really lifted them. My job is to extract the best of them and make them competitive. I feel this job fits my character. It's been a big decision for me and my family."

Moyes, who is Sociedad's fourth British manager after Harry Lowe, John Toshack and Chris Coleman, hinted that he will dip into the transfer market in January if he thinks it is necessary.

Just after Moyes accepted, Carlos Vela, known as El Bombardero, scored two goals for Mexico in a game against the Netherlands, winning 2-1. This should make Moyes more optimistic as Vela is one of Real Sociedad's star players.

I think that Moyes will succeed at Real Sociedad. I think he'll make some good signings, win more games and have a long and successful reign.

Roger Federer beats Andy Murray

Dylan Riley McNeice ShAR

On Thursday 13 Nov 2014, Rodger Federer and Andy Murray went face to face in the ATP World Tour Finals and Andy Murray won 6-0, 6-1. The match lasted as little as 56 minutes. The tournament is being held at the US Open. At the time this was happening, David Ferrer was against Kei Nishikori and despite David Ferrer losing, he did make it challenging for Kei Nishikori. Kei Nishikori won 4-6, 6-4, and 6-1. Not many people expected that Andy Murray would get beaten, even though he is a Wimbledon finalist. Here's a quote from Roger Federer: "Clearly I'm very happy to win a good match. I knew I was qualified so maybe I went in a bit relaxed. It was not the way I thought it was going to go. There's always next year for Andy."

Now that these two matches have been played, Kei Nishikori will play against Roger Federer in the final. In my opinion Roger Federer will beat Kei Nishikori 6-3, 6-2. Last year Novak Djokovic won the ATP World Tour Finals. At the minute Roger Federer is 2nd and Andy Murray 6th and Kei Nishikori is 5th. In my opinion Roger Federer is not the best player in the world but he is one of the people that are very good at keeping his name known. I would think that Roger Federer will win if nothing bad happens (bad injuries or a very bad day).

Scotland Against Ireland

Football Match

Oliver Roberts SHCM

A match is starting and it is between Scotland and Ireland in Group D and it's going to be held at Celtic Park in Glasgow. The teams are normally equally matched but Scotland and Ireland have quite a few players injured in their teams.

One of the players injured is James McArthur, after he pulled up a calf injury during training. Many people think that Scotland will win after their good performance in the friendly recent matches.

Scotland Line up

1 Marshall 2 Hutton 4 Martin R 5 Greer 3 Whittaker 6 Maloney 7 Morrison 8 Brown S 11 Anya 9 Fletcher 10 Naismith

Ireland Line up

1 Forde 12 Meyler 4 O'Shea 3 Wilson 2 Ward 7 McGeady 18 Quinn S 6 Whelan 11 McLean 19 Walters 10 Keane

The kick off will be at 19:45 and many people are saying it will be a good and interesting game with a good display of football. Although many people in the Ireland squad play for Celtic their manager has told the team it will give no favours to them in the upcoming match given effects of fans and trouble with injuries.

Tiger loose in France!

Robert Littler ShLB

An image of a tiger was taken near Disneyland Paris, in the car park of a Supermarket. The owner of the Supermarket's wife took the image at 8:30. Animal experts, along with specially trained wolves are all helping to track down this "big cat".

Experts speculate that by the look of the image that it is a young tiger and weighs approximately 70kg.

A warning has been sent out to people in the area to stay indoors or at least avoid walking on foot outdoors as the "big cat" may still around.

Overhead helicopters are patrolling on the lookout for the tiger. Representatives from Disneyland Paris have said, "We do not keep tigers".
